HAWAII The Road To Victory

As the world-wide conflict turns from the defensive to the offensive for the United Nations, the Hawaiian Islands begin to take on a new hope for the free peoples of the world. It is only now being realized that Japan is likely to survive its European partners and will continue to fight alone until faced with victory or complete annihilation. That the burden of defeating Japan will fall on the United States and that the Hawaiian Islands will necessarily play a dominant role is now recognized.

The year following Japan's attack on Oahu was spent in making these islands impregnable.

The great battle of Midway proved that these precautions were not taken in vain, that Japan did intend to occupy these islands and was willing to pay a terrible price in men and ships. To date, the civilian population in Hawaii has been quite calm in the face of earth-shattering events taking place in the South Pacific, but as this area grows in importance, as the wounded make their way back to Hawaii and the death lists increase, Hawaii will fully awaken to the fact that their beautiful islands are the real starting point for victory—that the eyes and hopes of the United Nations are focused on them.

THE U. S. MARINES

First to Land . . .

First to Fight . . .

The Marine in Hawaii, like the American Marine all over the world, believes himself to be the greatest fighting man in the world, and in action it is up to him to prove it—which he does. He has heard his corps called "The fightin'est men on earth, and the neatest," and because this has been said of the Marine, he lives up to it. He also never forgets the old saying, "A Marine never surrenders."

It is this pride in his corps that makes the Marine great in battle; he knows the history of the Marine Corps from its earliest inception to the present day and trains and prepares himself to uphold this tradition. The Marine's bible is his gun, he lives for and by this weapon and the results show, for the Marine Corps has won fifteen of the thirty-one national rifle matches and has never lost a title when its best shots were available for competition. He is a crack shot and a thorough soldier in the roughest going, and knows it—and when the chips are down he proves his point.

Knowing his organization through and through, the Marine revels in stories like the one told of Captain Lloyd W. Williams who on arriving to relieve a French outfit in France just as the order to retreat was given, said, "Retreat, hell, we just got here," following which they went on to victory. The Marine accepts as gospel truth, the slogan credited to the famous correspondent Richard Harding Davis, "The Marines have landed and the situation is well in hand."

HAWAII'S WAR DOGS

It is not surprising that man should call upon his best friend when most in need—in time of war. Dogs since time immemorial have been man's best friend, have been known to make the supreme sacrifice both in defense of their masters and through heartbreak through the loss or disappearance of their loved friend.

While dogs have been commercially used by man for thousands of years, it was not until the German military machine first put the dog to military use that their true value as an army unit was appreciated.

The Germans used German Shepherds and Doberman-Pinscher breeds almost exclusively for army use, but America is now utilizing many of the smaller breeds. America is late in its dog training program—but not too late; we are training dogs on a large scale and the results are already gratifying.

Mr. Harold Castle, well known Hawaiian dog authority, has been placed in charge of the War Dog Training center here on Oahu for the purpose of training dogs for the Hawaiian Department, which includes the line islands, "down under." Mr. Elliot Humphrey, trainer of the famous "Seeing Eye Dogs," is in charge of training the dogs.

Dogs trained here on Oahu have already proved themselves of military value in battles in the Solomon Islands. Being used as a forerunner for scouting parties and often succeeding in locating snipers and uncovering Japanese positions long before human beings are able to learn of their presence.

1. Our fighting dog friend goes looking for the enemy.
2. The enemy is sighted and the fight begins.
3. Our canine fighter puts up a terrific struggle, proving himself a dangerous foe.
4. The results show what terrific damage our faithful friends are capable of inflicting.

Lean, tough and confident this Army Private has packed his equipment over most of the Oahu trails. He represents the type of soldier being trained in Hawaii.

The native dancers find an interested audience whenever they entertain the local soldiers. The boys are well behaved and vociferous applauders.

Shown below are two members of a bicycle-borne intelligence platoon, an integral part of the Army activities here on Oahu.

Christmas Day was not forgotten by our soldiers. Religious services, a regular part of the Army activities here, are well attended and a part of the men's lives.

HAD GIVES $52,000 TO BUY WAR PLANE

Last August employees of the Hawaiian Air Depot pledged $50,000 to purchase a war plane for the United States Air Forces. Four months later, $52,000 had been raised and the check sent to Washington. This money was not loaned to the government and had nothing to do with War Bonds. It was an outright gift from the air depot employees to the Army Air Forces, representing about 10 percent of every employee's monthly salary.

The plane, a late model fighter, was formally turned over to Major General Willis H. Hale during a presentation ceremony held at the air depot.

Like many women today, Christine is rapidly learning to handle mechanical equipment.

A DAY WITH CHRISTINE

Christine Sierens is a typical civil service employee, working for the Hawaiian Air Depot and living with her sailor husband in the Naval Housing, one of Uncle Sam's low-cost housing projects.

Christine's day starts early, for she must be at work by seven-thirty, finishing at four. Her spare time is spent largely in cleaning house and washing, leaving remarkably little time for recreation. Her apartment, located many miles from Honolulu, makes it a rare occasion when she and her seldom-seen husband get into town for dinner and a movie. Life is mostly work with very little play for Christine.

She is 21, blonde, pretty and a hard worker. Sees nothing odd about her work and feels that she is merely doing her bit. Her husband, an Aviation Metal-smith First Class, is away a good part of the time, leaving Christine to spend the evenings with her girl friend. Photographs by Dick Wall.

Working on a bomber that has caused the Japs as much damage as the one pictured, is a pleasure according to Christine.

Checking out with the boys at the end of the day.

Hawaiian Air Depot Form Own Army

HAD was not the first to form a defense corps in the Territory, but it was one of the first individual organizations to form their own army and now have one of the best trained and equipped of the civilian corps now in Hawaii. Under the personal tutelage of Major Robert Moore, of the regular army, this new regiment of civilians is both young and enthusiastic, fine qualities for fighting men. Starting off with a rigid training schedule of six days weekly, the regiment has now schooled and selected its non-commissioned and commissioned officers, and has officially been sworn in by General Emmons.

Being well equipped and properly trained this group will make a good showing if ever put to the test under fire. Many of its members were here on Hickam Field the day of the Japanese attack and have not forgotten. They have an old score to settle.

ARMY AIR CORPS

Air Power-The Weapon of ultimate victory

This war now engulfing the entire world is a war of machines, a war of trucks, tanks, ships and airplanes. Most of all, it is a war of airplanes, and America, the home of the airplane, is preparing to fight just such a war. The weight of our bombers has already been felt over Germany, Italy and Japan and the punishment they are inflicting will increase daily.

Here in the Pacific the Japanese have learned only too well the power of American air power and with each passing day will learn to have more and more respect for not only the men flying the machines but the airplane themselves. It will be heavy American bombers spilling their heavy loads on the Japanese islands that will finally bring the treacherous Japanese to their knees.

BOMBS FELL

in action*

Within one minute after the first Japanese bombs fell on Pearl Harbor at 7:55 a.m. December 7, 1941, Manuel P. Medeiros, manager of the Pearl Harbor Drivers' Association, was notified of the attack.

Immediately, Mr. Medeiros—who was in his office in the grounds of the Honolulu Army-Navy YMCA—ordered every available motor vehicle connected with the Association to report to the usual pickup point for navy personnel, the Army-Navy YMCA. In addition, Mr. Medeiros placed four men at telephones to call independent taxis to the assembly points. Meanwhile, radio calls had gone out for navy personnel and civilian employees and Pearl Harbor defense workers to report to their posts.

By the time the first navy men and Pearl Harbor workers had reached the rallying point, the cabs and buses were there, waiting to rush them out to the great naval base. Swiftly the sailors and workers were driven to where they were most needed—and all without charge, for orders were given that no fares were to be collected—it was to be a free service to the nation. Personnel also was carried to Hickam Field and Red Hill and later in the day the army was given assistance in getting men from Honolulu to Wheeler Field, Schofield Barracks, Haleiwa and other rural Oahu points. On their return trips, the cabs and buses brought out the wounded from the areas under fire.

On that day, December 7, 1941, the Pearl Harbor Drivers' Association men and the independent drivers called into service drove about 75 seven passenger cabs and 27 buses, covering more than 9,000 miles and carrying 6,500 passengers.

Yes, it is all in the records.

And the Pearl Harbor Drivers' Association is gratified that it was able to be of such service.

PROCESSING LINE—This unit of three machines begins the processing line. The first unit, a pre-vacuumizer, ruptures the air cells of the fruit to produce uniform color and quality. The second machine adds the syrup to the can, the syrup being made from pineapple juice and cane sugar. The third is the vacuum cleaning machine, where under high vacuum the lid is double sealed onto the body of the can.

Pineapple Hawaii's

Second Largest Industry

Hawaii's pineapple industry, which now ranks as the islands' second largest industry, is really the baby of the large crop family. Its industrial history dates back to 1901, when a far-sighted young Harvard graduate started his first pineapple crop. James Dole planted his first pineapples in 1902, harvesting and packing in 1903. In those days the packing was done by hand. He produced 1200 cases of pineapple that year, an output that can be matched today in 15 minutes in the new Dole plant.

New problems have faced the pineapple people since the war and many of the trials have proved inconvenient. However, ships bringing supplies to the islands have taken their crops back to the mainland, thus allowing pineapple as well as its sister crop, sugar, to continue to prosper.

Pineapples are grown on five of the six major islands and produce more than 80 percent of the world's supply of pineapples. Within recent years the output has ranged between 15,000,000 and 21,000,000 cases annually, and is valued at around $55,000,000.

Here is shown a tractor pulling a mulch-paper laying device. As the paper is laid, fertilizer is introduced beneath. This paper furnishes a hothouse for the plants, which are shortly being planted through it, aiding materially in preventing weed growth.

A general picture of the labeling room showing the lines of machines and the means of conveying the empty cases on chutes to the packing tables. The filled cases go from this room directly to outgoing ships or adjoining warehouses.

This famous water tank on the top of the Hawaiian Pineapple Company is a landmark in Honolulu. Its capacity is one hundred thousand gallons.

Here are seen acre after acre of newly planted fields on the island of Lanai. This island is owned by the Dole Pineapple Company. In approximately twenty months this field will be filled with ripened pineapples.

SUGAR

During the year just passed Hawaii produced 868,678 tons of sugar, approximately 131,322 tons less than its peace time quota. Working under more difficult labor conditions than usual, the sugar industry in Hawaii did a good job in furnishing the mainland with badly needed sugar. For in war time, not only civilians and soldiers need sugar, but our allies as well, are in need of this precious commodity.

The industry that guides the lives of so many of the island people is doing its share to help the military work out its many complex problems here in Hawaii. The plantations have been more than willing to lend skilled engineers and laborers when called upon to help the army tackle a difficult job. Sugar has a great stake in this war and the industry is doing everything in its power to protect that stake, and the American way of life.

Most spectacular war job of the Hawaiian Sugar industry was the work performed by the laboratory of the H.S.P.A. Experiment Station in assisting Hawaii's blood plasma bank. When the blood reserves that had been built up were drained, the Experiment Station provided its sterilizers and centrifuges to manufacture plasma and converted its limited glass-blowing equipment to help in the Herculean task of producing sufficient flasks in which to store the precious fluid.

AL says:

When war broke on Hawaii it was generally thought that sports would die a natural death. It was not long however, before soldiers, sailors and civilians were clamoring for more sporting events. For good, clean competitive sports was one of the freedoms they were fighting for.

The demand for good athletic shows is greater than ever before in the history of the Territory. The only problem facing promoters today is in locating sufficient talent.

I will continue to bring Honolulu the finest sporting talent available as long as I am affiliated with the sporting picture in Hawaii. Every effort will be made to keep clean athletics on the same high level as Honolulu is accustomed to witnessing.

(Signed) AL KARASICK

On the plantations ingenuity has been stimulated by the war. Reduced volume of labor and loss of equipment to the military have called on engineers to devise many new ways of saving time and labor. One such development is this huge ninety thousand gallon clarifier which will do its part to help meet the nation's sugar needs.

Victory corps are gaining popularity all over the country but in Hawaii they mean real work for the high school youngsters who turn out one day each week to labor in the fields. It's real work and a great help to the plantations, whose labor supplies have been heavily drained by the demands of urgent war projects.

Old Number Three gets the highball as a crew of servicemen roll her out of the roundhouse. Our army today numbers men from every craft and trade, including former switchmen, engineers and firemen from the nation's railroads. This group of soldiers took like ducks to water to the handling of this plantation locomotive.

Idle hands are not allowed in the plantation communities of fighting Hawaii. Large or small, every sugar farm has organized its people, regardless of race or creed, into useful groups to serve the country's needs. Red Cross workers often meet like this in the unused corner of a social hall, sometimes in one another's homes.

HOW FAR CAN FREEDOM REACH ?

As far as ships can go, carrying the bone and sinew of freedom...the troops, food, guns, and gear that keep freedom free. Men on our battlefronts know this. They know they can go, eat, fight, and win, with our American Merchant Marine carrying on.

The reach of MATSON ships is long, because our experience is long...over six decades long...preparing us for the very job we are now privileged to be doing, with all our ships and all our men.

FUEL FOR VICTORY

Victory will depend on man-power and machine power — but food-power runs the men who build the machines and use them. Among the most energizing of all foodstuffs — steeling soldiers and civilians alike—is sugar.

Today Great Britain, for example, is dependent on the same sugar sources as we are. Therefore, sugar rationing on the Mainland now is not merely a home precaution: it is a measure to protect the United Nations... to conserve the power of the United Nations' war effort. Clearly seen now is the need for fostering U. S. sugar production to the hilt. For the men and machines employed by our sugar industries are backing the men at the front with an essential war product.
